The place where he once lived on Fifty-sixth street, this city, has not been occupied by him for a long time, and at the resort on South Fifth avenue this morning it was said that he no longer has anything to do with it.

His brother John, who is admitted to be the most respectable member of the family, removed long ago from his residence on West Forty-third street, and no one seems to know where he is living. The cottage at Rayport seems to be owned by "The" Allen and his wife, and between them and the Ridleys there but that Mr. Ridley's family had been stopping at Rayport all Summer, but that Mr. Ridley's family had been stopping at Bayport all Summer, but that Mr. Ridley's family had been stopping at Bayport all Summer, but that Mr. Ridley's family had been stopping at Rayport all Summer, but that Mr. Ridley's family had been stopping at Rayport all Summer, but that Mr. Ridley in the formal of the formal and directed the business.

Whatever the causes that led to the shooting there seems to be no doubt that a deliberate attempt was made to shoot the millionaire dry-goods merchant. He was the only man in the house at the time. His wife and Miss Allen and two or three other women were in the house, all of them asleep, but neither "The" Allen nor his wife was there. Both, it is said, were stopping in this city.

It was about 4.30 o'clock yesterday morning when one of the women was awakened by hearing the voices of men on the lawn underneath.

Becoming alarmed, she aroused the servant, named Hannah, who, from the plexion clear, and he locked vigorous on the lawn underneath.

Becoming alarmed, she aroused the servant, named Hannah, who, from the window, asked the men-there were three of them—what they wanted. In reply they asked if Mr. Allen was home, and on being answered in the negative asked if Mr. Ridley was there.

The latter was then awakened, and putting on some of his clothing he asked what was the matter. The reply was that a friend of his had been injured, and he was asked to come down.

Running upstairs, he took a revolver of clined to do so without first seeing who his questioners were.

Running upstairs, he took a revolver of small callbre from a bureau drawer, the only weapon in the house, and running back to the window, he fired a shot at one of them fired a revolver at him.

Then all made off, and no attempt was nade to follow them.

The three men were afterwards seen making their way out in the Sound in an open boat. The police of Bayport are looking for them.

Later in the day a telegram was sent to Mrs. Allen, in this city, and at 7 o'clock last evening she returned to Bayport, but "The" Allen, it is said, did o't put in an appearance.

Mr. Ridley's idea of the motter is that the men were burglars, and finding that he was the only man in the house, wanted to decoy him outside for the purpose of killing him or rendering him powerless to prevent them securing their plunder.

Had they done so, it would have been an easy matter to terrorize the women. Harry Ridley returned this afternoon from a visit to his father at Bayport, and was seem by an "Evening World" reporter at the establishment in Grand "My father believes that the men who shot at him intended to rob the house," said he. "From the way it looks, I should think that they meant to wound my father, then forcibly overcome the other immates and carry away whatever was available. "There have been several burglaries committed recently in Bayport, and not having been traced by the police they probably made another attempt. "One of the men in asking for my father represented himself to be Mitter from each to the window and let me bave a look at you." "With this the men came to the window and let me bave a look at you." Her refusal is believed to have caused hard feelings between Howland and Castler, but Howland remarked to both Mrs. Castler and Miss Smith, only a few days before his death, that he and Castler were good friends.

It is noticed that upon the dead man's shoes not a particle of mud, mari nor dirt of any description can be seen. It would have been almost impossible for a man to have walked the distance Howland is supposed to have covered that night, around mari pits, without having mud upon his shoes or clothing.

Again, a gash upon his forelead above his right eye, tends to indicate that he had met with foul play at the hands of some person and been taken to this out of the way place and thrown into the pit where his body was found.

atre was down in Allen street vesterdapensioners at "The World's" Bread Pand illes who are "in a hole," and if the pretty actress wants to be the means of helping one of them out, she has only to become a subscriber to the Bread Pund.

The same privilege is extended to every liberal-minded and generous-hearted individual in the community.

It is doubtful if the history of Allen street can show anything like the popularity it now enjoys. The crowd in the vicinity of Rivington street during the hours that "The World's" bread station is open is innumerable.

People in distress, children in poverty, the homeless, friendless and foodless come from all sections of the city.

The spectacle made by many of these unfortunates on the return trip would be amusing under other circumstances. Women have resources unknown to the foriorn men. Sometimes the covered loaf is hidden in the drapery of a child in arms, sometimes it is carried away in the improvised pocket of a turned-ungaron, while the mother with a shawl on her head will put a big loaf under each arm and proudly depart with her empty hands equivocally displayed.

It is different with the men. They are awkward enough under the best of circumstances, but handicapped by misfortune the figures they cut hurrying of with the smusgled bounty of compassion are most pathetic.

The refliculous spectacle of a stern-looking, pallid-faced tailor, emaciated to the line where skin and bone touch, emerging from the slife door of the bread station with the affected corporation of a brower night provoke a lauga, but it would be joyless.

Rib lines are austorted to a painful
